Learning Outcomes:

Indicate the learning outcomes and areas of the syllabus you are seeking to examine within, for this submission piece.

Identify and understand the key UK consumer protection legislation that regulates the fair-trading environment	✓
Explain due diligence and case law which has assisted with interpretation of the concept	✓
Understand the legislation which governs the activities of an investigation, both civil and criminal	✓
Understand the controls on disclosure of information when conducting an investigation	✓

Question:

Use an example of a criminal or civil investigation involving offences or breaches in legislation within the syllabus for Stage 1. The investigation must be one where you have taken a lead role, planned and executed investigative steps up to and including a formal interview or consultation with a trader, produce a report explaining the following:

- The evidence required to prove the elements of the offence/s or breach in question including a witness statement
- Your considerations when planning how to collect this evidence, and any limitations on what you were able to collect
- How powers were used to obtain evidence
- How did you plan and conduct the formal interview or consultation?

Your report should include reference to any relevant case law or guidance, and evidence should include copies/excerpts of actual investigation reports, statements, notices and photographs. Documents should be appended but redacted where appropriate.

If you work outside of a trading standards department, in a compliance role, you may use a compliance issue which has occurred that has either been investigated internally only, or has involved the intervention/investigation of a Trading Standards department, if it meets the coursework requirements. It is understood that in both cases you may not be able to show that you have 'real life' experience of undertaking the activities. Therefore, your coursework should explain your involvement internally but also provide narrative addressing the assessment criteria from a Trading Standards enforcement perspective, "as if" you were investigating as a Trading Standards Officer would. For example, you may not actually take a formal statement from a witness as part of your normal duties, but you may speak to various people concerned when conducting an internal investigation into a compliance issue. You can therefore explain what you have done and attach any evidence but also explain how a Trading Standards Officer would have gathered the evidence in a formal witness statement and write up your findings in the form of a witness statement as an investigating officer would.

All evidence must be real (not simulated) and current (within 2 years of submission).
