

Leon Livermore

Leon joined the Chartered Trading Standards Institute as its Chief Executive in February 2013 after a successful career in Local Government.

During his time in Local Government he rightly earned a reputation for delivering culture change and innovative, citizen centred and highly effective services. Services led by Leon won numerous awards including Beacon Status for Better Regulation and a prestigious National Business Award. Since joining the Institute he has worked tirelessly on behalf of the trading standards profession ensuring that politicians, businesses and consumers understand the value that the profession brings to a modern vibrant United Kingdom. He has overseen such successes as the transfer of the Consumer Codes Approval Scheme from the Office of Fair Trading to the Institute, chairing the Government's Used Car Commission looking into the high levels of consumer complaints and delivering the National Trading Standards Conversation.

Away from work Leon enjoys village life with his family in Cambridgeshire and is fully involved with his local community, especially youth organisations. He is a keen sportsman and enjoys all sports, though mainly as a spectator these days.
