

e-learning college: food standards contributors

£40 per hour

CTSI wish to appoint an individual to help maintain learning material contained in our 'ts e-learning college' product. We require contributors to update our food standards material for publication.

The material comprises of courses (which include questions) covering labelling but also inspections and sampling.

Ideal candidates will be trading standards officers, trainers, lecturers, etc with a very good knowledge of a wide range of trading standards legislation and a particular interest in the chosen area.

Most of our contributors do this work at home, separately to their day job (unless their employer is happy for work time to be spent on it). Please be sure you have enough free time to complete the work before applying.

The material is checked, and updated if necessary, on a yearly basis, and more often if legislation changes. There may also be queries on the content, which you will need to investigate. In addition, there may be occasions when new material is required. A certain amount of IT competence is required as we use an online updating system.

The positions attract a fee of £40 per hour. As the material is of varying lengths, we may require a time estimate from you before an update or the writing of new material commences.

If you are interested, or have any questions, please contact Josh Gambling at

NB: contributors are not CTSI employees but contractors; therefore tax, national insurance, etc is not dealt with by CTSI.
